RE: MUR 7025
Ronald McMillan

Dear Mr. Jacobs:

On July 3, 2014, the Federal Election Commission notified your client of a complaint alleging that he had violated certain sections of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended. On March 15, 2016, the Commission found, on the basis of the information in the complaint, and information provided by respondents, that there is no reason to believe that your client violated the Act. Accordingly, the Commission closed the file in this matter.

Documents related to the case will be placed on the public record within 30 days. See Statement of Policy Regarding Disclosure of Closed Enforcement and Related Files, 68 Fed. Reg. 70,426 (Dec. 18, 2003) and Statement of Policy Regarding Placing First General Counsel's Reports on the Public Record, 74 Fed. Reg. 66,132 (Dec. 14, 2009). The Factual and Legal Analysis, which explains the Commission's findings, is enclosed for your information.

If you have any questions, please contact Claudio J. Pavia, the attorney assigned to this matter at (202) 694-1597.

Sincerely,

Friends of Mike Lee and Mike McCauley in his official capacity as treasurer
J.P. Morgan Chase & Company

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter was generated by a complaint filed with the Federal Election Commission by Maryann Martindale and the Alliance for a Better Utah, alleging several violations of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended (the "Act") resulting from the 2011 short sale of Sen. Mike Lee's house. The Complaint alleges that J.P. Morgan Chase & Company ("JPMC") made a prohibited national bank contribution to Lee when it approved the short sale and waived the balance that Lee still owed on the mortgages.<sup>1</sup> The Complaint also alleges that Ronald McMillan made potentially excessive contributions to Lee when he purchased Lee's house and then rented another house to Lee by arranging those transactions at prices other than fair market value. Finally, the Complaint alleges that Friends of Mike Lee (the "Committee"), the principal campaign committee for Mike Lee's 2010 Senate campaign, failed to disclose the contributions, and that Lee converted the contributions to personal use.

<sup>1</sup> Technically, Lee financed the purchase of his house through two simultaneously-executed deeds of trust. A deed of trust is virtually identical to a mortgage, and Lee's loans shall be referred to here by the more common term, "mortgage." Restatement (Third) of Property (Mortgages) Intro. (1997).

1     II.     FACTUAL BACKGROUND

2             In 2007, Lee purchased a house in Alpine, Utah, in the midst of what the media later
3     described as the height of a housing boom.<sup>2</sup> JPMC provided Lee, then an attorney in private 4     practice, with two mortgages that had a combined value of $1,440,000.<sup>3</sup>

5             In 2010, Lee was elected Senator from Utah, and, during that election cycle, Ronald 6     McMillan and his wife, Bonnie McMillan, made contributions to the Committee.<sup>4</sup> Upon his 7     election, Lee reportedly faced several financial challenges in addition to his lower Senate salary.<sup>5</sup> 8     The real estate market reportedly “tanked,” his former law firm filed for bankruptcy while owing 9     him a “large sum,” and the short sale of a neighboring property lowered the already-depressed
10    home values in his neighborhood.<sup>6</sup> As a result, Lee apparently could not afford the mortgage 11    payments for his house but could not sell the property at a suitable price either. JPMC approved 12    a June 2011 short sale of Lee’s house to McMillan and waived the deficiency balance, that is, the 13    remaining amount that Lee owed on the mortgage after the sale.<sup>7</sup> In return, Lee forfeited a

<sup>2</sup>     Attached to the Complaint are two Salt Lake Tribune news articles that describe the circumstances of the short sale. Compl., Exs. C at 1, D at 1. The news articles indicate that Lee purchased the house in 2008. However, according to publicly-filed documents, it appears that Lee purchased the house in August 2007. See Warranty Deed (Aug. 17, 2007).

<sup>3</sup>     JPMC provided Lee with a deed of trust to secure a debt of $1,100,000 and a closed-end deed of trust to secure a debt of $340,000. See Deed of Trust at 2 (Aug. 21, 2007); Closed-End Deed of Trust at 1 (Aug. 21, 2007). The news articles attached to the Complaint indicate that Lee purchased the house for $1,100,000, but this apparently confuses the value of one of his mortgages with the same price. See Compl., Exs. C at 1, D at 1.

<sup>5</sup>     Lee reportedly stated that he purchased the house while earning a salary of several hundred thousand dollars a year, but expected that he might have to sell if elected to the Senate since the lower salary would make it difficult to pay the mortgage. Compl., Ex. D at 1.

<sup>7</sup>     Compl., Ex. D at 1. The Complaint alleges that the short sale took place in May 2012, but the available information indicates that it occurred in June 2011. Compare Compl. at 2 with Compl., Ex. D at 1; Warranty Deed (Jun. 14, 2011) (signed by Michael S. Lee); Warranty Deed (Jun. 14, 2011) (signed by Sharon B. Lee).

1 “significant” down payment.<sup>8</sup> McMillan funded his purchase with two mortgages that had a 2 combined value of $720,100.<sup>9</sup> A news article claims that JPMC waived a deficiency balance of 3 approximately $400,000.<sup>10</sup> Shortly after the sale, McMillan rented another house to Lee in the 4 same area.<sup>11</sup>

5 The Complaint alleges that JPMC made an unreported campaign contribution to Lee by 6 waiving the deficiency balance.<sup>12</sup> According to the Complaint, other JPMC mortgage borrowers, 7 in contrast to the favorable disposition Lee received, “faced foreclosure and ongoing personal 8 liability.”<sup>13</sup> The Complaint further alleges that McMillan made an unreported campaign 9 contribution to the Committee because McMillan and Lee “may have” agreed to a short sale and 10 rental prices other than at fair market value.<sup>14</sup> As evidence for this claim, the Complaint asserts 11 that the short sale and rental — each involving Lee and McMillan — appear “prearranged” and 12 therefore must not have been negotiated at arm’s length.<sup>15</sup> Finally, the Complaint alleges that 13 Lee converted the contributions from JPMC and McMillan to personal use.<sup>16</sup>

1 The Committee's Response denies the allegations and states that the short sale and rental 2 have "absolutely nothing to do with the Committee."<sup>17</sup> The Committee asserts that it did not 3 receive contributions or make disbursements involving Lee's residences.<sup>18</sup>

4 JPMC's Response denies the allegations and explains that in March 2011 — several 5 months before the short sale — it instituted a general policy of forgiving short sale deficiency 6 balances.<sup>19</sup>

13 JPMC argues that because the waiver of Lee's deficiency balance was 14 consistent with this policy, it follows that JPMC did not waive Lee's debt to influence an 15 election.<sup>23</sup> JPMC could not confirm or deny any details of its transactions with Lee because 16 under the Financial Right to Privacy Act (12 U.S.C. § 3401 et. seq.), it "cannot release 17 information contained in the financial records of any customer to a government authority unless

1 pursuant to the customer's authorization, administrative or judicial subpoena, summons, search 2 warrant, or formal written request for the particular information or financial records."<sup>24</sup>

3       McMillan's Response denies the allegations and argues that the Complaint is 4 speculative.<sup>25</sup> McMillan attached a sworn declaration to his response.<sup>26</sup> He states that the 5 transactions "had nothing to do with [Lee's] position as a United States Senator," and "nothing to 6 do with any of his campaigns."<sup>27</sup> McMillan asserts that he liked the property and believed that 7 purchasing it would be a smart financial decision.<sup>28</sup> Moreover, he explains that his agent
8 conducted negotiations for the short sale and that JPMC approved the terms of sale as part of a 9 "lengthy process."<sup>29</sup> Although McMillan acknowledges that he has known Lee and his family 10 since moving into the neighborhood, he and Lee are members of the same church, and he 11 apparently was aware that Lee owned the house, McMillan states that he does not recall 12 discussing the sale with Lee while the transaction was pending.<sup>30</sup> McMillan represents that his 13 first conversation with Lee about the purchase occurred at their church after the short sale was 14 completed.<sup>31</sup> McMillan explains that he offered to rent his old house to Lee — who expressed a 15 desire to remain in the same neighborhood for school and church reasons — while McMillan
16 waited for market conditions to improve.<sup>32</sup> McMillan states that his agent identified market

4 III. ANALYSIS

5 The Act defines a contribution as “any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of 6 money or anything of value made by any person for the purpose of influencing any election for 7 Federal office.”<sup>35</sup> The Commission’s regulations provide that a third party’s payment of a 8 candidate’s personal expense shall be a contribution “unless the payment would have been made 9 irrespective of the candidacy.”<sup>36</sup> The Commission has explained in prior matters that because 10 candidates continue to engage in personal transactions during their candidacy that are beyond the 11 campaign finance matters regulated by the Act, a finding of reason to believe that a candidate’s 12 personal transaction resulted in a contribution to his or her campaign requires specific 13 information demonstrating a nexus between the transactions and the campaign.<sup>37</sup> Further, the

Reg. 7862, 7871 (Feb. 9, 1995) (“If a third party pays for the candidate’s personal expenses, but would not ordinarily have done so if that candidate were not running for office, the third party is effectively making the payment for the purpose of assisting that candidacy.”).

<sup>37</sup> See, e.g., MUR 6035 (Northern Trust Co.) (home mortgage); MUR 5141 (Moran for Congress) (loan from a friend to help pay for legal expenses related to a domestic relations matter); MUR 4960 (Hillary Rodham Clinton for U.S. Senate Exploratory Committee) (cost of a candidate’s move to a new house); MUR 4944 (PNC Mortgage Corp.) (home mortgage); see also Statement of Reasons at 2, n.2, Commr’s McDonald, Mason, Sandstrom, Smith, & Thomas, MUR 4944 (“SOR”) (recognizing “there are a number of issues arising from a candidate’s personal situation . . . that may become campaign issues, but the Commission will not necessarily therefore deem expenses arising from such controversies to be campaign expenses”).

1 Commission has advised that “[t]he basis for this determination is the context of the transaction’s 2 surrounding factual circumstances.”<sup>38</sup>

3 A candidate who receives a contribution “for use in connection with” his or her campaign 4 is considered “as having received the contribution . . . as an agent of the authorized committee or 5 committees of such candidate.”<sup>39</sup> A candidate’s authorized committee must disclose the 6 identification of each person whose contribution or contributions have an aggregate amount or 7 value in excess of $200 within an election cycle.<sup>40</sup> No person shall convert a contribution or 8 donation to personal use.<sup>41</sup> The Act also provides that no person shall make an excessive 9 contribution to any candidate and his or her authorized political committee, and candidates and 10 their committees shall not knowingly accept such contributions.<sup>42</sup> In addition, the Act prohibits 11 national banks and corporations organized by authority of any law of Congress from making 12 contributions to candidates, and prohibits candidates and their committees from knowingly 13 accepting or receiving such contributions.<sup>43</sup>

14 A. JPMC’s Waiver of the Deficiency Balance on Lee’s Home Mortgage was Not 15 a Contribution.

16 The Complaint argues that the amount JPMC forgave on Lee’s mortgage should be 17 treated as a contribution and is subject to the Act’s prohibitions and limitations. However, the 18 available information suggests that the short sale was a consequence of Lee’s personal financial

1 situation with no apparent connection to the Committee or Lee's campaign for Senate.<sup>44</sup> The 2 Committee denied that the short sale involved the campaign in any way, and it occurred shortly 3 after the 2010 election and over five years before the 2016 election.<sup>45</sup>

4 Furthermore, the available information in the record suggests that JPMC waived Lee's 5 deficiency balance irrespective of his candidacy. The Commission has considered several 6 factors when addressing the status of third party payments: (1) whether the payment freed up the 7 candidate's funds for campaign purposes; (2) whether the payment granted the candidate more 8 time to spend on the campaign instead of pursuing usual employment; and (3) whether the 9 payment would not have been made but for the individual's candidacy.<sup>46</sup> There is no 10 information tending to suggest that the waiver freed up Lee's funds for campaign purposes.
11 Moreover, the waiver did not enable Lee to spend more time on his campaign as his employment 12 situation remained unaffected by the short sale.

13 The remaining question is whether JPMC would have waived the deficiency balance but 14 for Lee's candidacy. It does not appear that a short sale was unusual at the time,<sup>47</sup> and JPMC
15 states that it had a general policy of waiving the deficiency balances on JPMC-owned mortgage

<sup>44</sup> See Factual & Legal Analysis at 5-6 n.2, MUR 6035 (citing SOR at 5, Commr's McDonald, Mason, Sandstrom, Smith, & Thomas, MUR 4944 ("Treating such loans for a candidate's home purchase or other personal living expenses as not 'in connection with the campaign' and as made 'irrespective of the candidacy' is well founded in our view.")).

<sup>45</sup> See SOR at 3-4, MUR 5141 (interpreting an approximately 17-month difference between the date of a loan and the next election as a factor supporting a finding of no reason to believe).

<sup>46</sup> Id. at 4 (explaining the factors that the Commission has considered in prior matters involving third party payments for a candidate's personal expense and applying a three-part test to find that a personal loan to a candidate from a friend was made irrespective of his candidacy).

<sup>47</sup> There is information in the record suggesting that short sales were "increasingly becoming the preferred option for banks" during this time period, given that "scrutiny over foreclosure practices were a nightmare for the banks." Compl., Ex. D at 1. This opinion comes from Daren Blomquist, vice president of RealtyTrac, "which looks at housing trends." Id. In addition, another house in Lee's neighborhood reportedly sold through a short sale around the same time. Id.

1 loans that it approved for a short sale.<sup>48</sup> Moreover, as mentioned above, the short sale was not 2 close in time to an upcoming election and there is no obvious connection between the short sale 3 and Lee's candidacy. The available information supporting the allegation is thus limited to the 4 Complaint's bare assertion that Lee received the benefits of a short sale and release from 5 personal liability whereas other JPMC borrowers faced the hardships of a foreclosure and 6 ongoing personal liability.<sup>49</sup> There are no available facts in the record indicating that Lee 7 received a benefit that would not have otherwise been available to similarly-situated individuals 8 or that JPMC's waiver was not made in the ordinary course of business.<sup>50</sup> Without more, a 9 reason to believe finding would be based solely on speculation.

10 In sum, the available information does not indicate a nexus between the short sale and 11 Lee's campaign. Therefore, the Commission finds no reason to believe that J.P. Morgan Chase 12 & Company made a prohibited contribution in violation of 52 U.S.C. § 30118(a), finds no reason 13 to believe that Mike Lee and Friends of Mike Lee and Mike McCauley in his official capacity as 14 treasurer knowingly received or accepted a prohibited contribution in violation of 52 U.S.C. § 15 30118(a), finds no reason to believe that Friends of Mike Lee and Mike McCauley in his official 16 capacity as treasurer failed to disclose a contribution in violation of 52 U.S.C. § 30104(b), and 17 finds no reason to believe that Mike Lee converted contributions from J.P. Morgan Chase & 18 Company to personal use in violation of 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b).

<sup>50</sup> This conclusion is consistent with analogous provisions of the Act and the Commission's regulations. There is an exemption from the definition of a contribution for bank loans made in accordance with applicable law and in the ordinary course of business. See 52 U.S.C. § 30101(8)(A)(vii); 11 C.F.R. § 100.82(a).

B. McMillan's Purchase of Lee's House and Rental of Another House to Lee Were Not Contributions.

The Complaint alleges that McMillan's purchase of Lee's house and his rental of another house to Lee both resulted in potentially excessive contributions that the Committee failed to disclose. The allegations are premised on the Complaint's unsupported assertion that the transactions appeared prearranged and, consequently, that they "may have" been arranged at prices other than fair market value.<sup>51</sup> As a threshold matter, it does not appear that McMillan provided Lee with anything of value in connection with these transactions — a necessary element of a contribution.

First, as to the short sale, it does not appear that McMillan provided Lee with a benefit by creating a market that otherwise did not exist so that Lee could avoid the inconvenience and bad publicity associated with a foreclosure, or so that Lee could benefit from JPMC's policy of waiving the deficiency balances on short sales. There is information that other homeowners resolved their mortgages through short sales around this time, including one of Lee's neighbors.<sup>52</sup> McMillan's sworn statement asserts that he purchased the house because he "liked the property, and considered the opportunity to buy it at a good price through a short sale to be a smart financial move."<sup>53</sup> Furthermore, there is no available information to support an inference that McMillan purchased the house for more than its fair market value. In any event, such information would not necessarily alter a contribution analysis since McMillan purchased the house through a short sale and JPMC had a policy of waiving the deficiency balance. In other

1 words, an inflated sales price would have benefited JPMC, not Lee. Accordingly, the available
2 information does not indicate that Lee received anything of value from McMillan in connection 3 with the short sale.

4 Second, as to the rental, there is no available information to support an inference that 5 McMillan charged Lee rent that was below the fair market value. A news article attached to the 6 Complaint provides a website's estimate that Lee's rent should be around $2,200 a month, but 7 the Complaint does not allege, and the available information does not indicate, what Lee actually 8 pays to McMillan.<sup>54</sup> Moreover, McMillan's sworn statement asserts that "I had my real estate 9 agent pull comparable rates and we negotiated the monthly payment based on those figures," and 10 that the amount was "enough to cover the monthly mortgage payment and provide additional to 11 [sic] save for future repairs and renovations."<sup>55</sup> There is no information to the contrary.
12 Accordingly, the available information does not indicate that Lee received anything of value 13 from McMillan in connection with the rental.

14 Even if McMillan did provide Lee with something of value in connection with the short 15 sale and rental — and, again, there is no indication that he did — those transactions appear to 16 have been personal, rather than campaign-related. The only apparent suggestion in the 17 Complaint of a connection with Lee's candidacy relates to the fact that McMillan and his wife 18 were contributors to Lee during the 2010 election cycle. However, as stated above, the 19 transactions involved Lee's personal residences, the Committee denied that the transactions 20 involved the campaign or campaign funds, Lee has not subsequently transferred any of his

1 personal funds to the Committee, and the transactions occurred after the 2010 election and over 2 five years before the 2016 election.

3 Furthermore, the available information suggests that McMillan made the transactions 4 irrespective of Lee's candidacy. First, they did not free up any funds for Lee to use in his 5 campaign. Second, they did not enable Lee to spend more time on his campaign. And, finally, 6 there is no indication that McMillan would not have engaged in those transactions but for Lee's 7 candidacy. McMillan's sworn statement asserts that they "had nothing to do with [Lee's] 8 position as a United States Senator, nothing to do with any of his campaigns, and I would have 9 entered into these transactions even if he were neither a candidate nor a sitting United States 10 Senator."<sup>56</sup> Moreover, McMillan states that he considered the purchase of Lee's house at a 11 lowered price to be a "smart financial move," and the rental of his old house to Lee to be prudent 12 since he did not think he could receive "top value" by selling in the prevailing market 13 conditions.<sup>57</sup> The available facts do not question those assessments.

14 In summary, there is no evidence that McMillan provided Lee with anything of value, or 15 of a nexus between the transactions at issue and Lee's campaign for Senate. Therefore, the 16 Commission finds no reason to believe that Ronald McMillan made an excessive contribution in 17 violation of 52 U.S.C. § 30116(a), finds no reason to believe that Mike Lee or Friends of Mike 18 Lee and Mike McCauley in his official capacity as treasurer knowingly accepted excessive 19 contributions in violation of 52 U.S.C. § 30116(f), finds no reason to believe that Friends of 20 Mike Lee and Mike McCauley in his official capacity as treasurer failed to disclose contributions
21 to the Commission in violation of 52 U.S.C. § 30104(b), and finds no reason to believe that Mike
